LIFE IN WEST APPOMATTOX

A New and Modern Town Arising Under the Shadow of Decay.

IS CRITICISM DEFEATED

Site of Lee Surrender House Still Visited as a Type of Shattered Hopes.

(Special to The Times-Dispatch.)
WEST APPOMATTOX, VA., May 7.—
To a visitor West Appomattox can easily furnish a surprise. In former years critics from every point of the compass freely shed their flippant sneers at the expense of Appointiox county. critic, who posed as a philosopher, and who has already inherited ob-on, is said to have declared that Robert E. Lee was invincible until he put foot on the red clay of Appointation, and that by the time he reached the center of the county he had to ask rations of a victo-filmslest justification, it has long ceased to exist.

Appomatiox is not one of the large counties nor one of the old ones. It is a piece of terrificial patchwork, having been constructed out of portlons of Buckingham, Prince Edward, Charlotte and Campbell counties. It has, however, quite long ago attained to that coherency inity, local sentiment and public spirit which constitute the best life of a county. It has also made almost unmatched progress in its special lines of industrial production. Portlons of the county are richly productive, and the farmers are doing much to enrich their lands and beautify their homes. Appomatiox stands erect in the line with her sister counties, full of self-respect, ardently smaged in the education of her children and abounding in Christian churches, the people take the utmost pride in testifying that there is not a saloon on Appomattox soil, and that the julier's occupation tompts his frineds to call him Othello. The old courthouse, the scene of possibly the most imposing and significant incident in American history, having ceased to be the county seat, and being three miles away from the railroad, wears an almost desolate air, but it is enshrined in the annals of American history. Its houses, highways, neighboring hills and villages are invested with imperishable luterest.

THE SURRENDER HIOUSE.

To an observer the demolition of the building in which the ceremonies incident to Gen. Loe's capitulation occurred was an historic blunder, but its ruins are still vishle and may be accepted as types of the shatter hopes which fell when the Southern flag was furled on that spot. The old capital of the county still clings to the name of Appomattox, and this hastled to the calling of the eventy still clings to the name of Appomattox. The new location is commanding and picturesque and readily attracts the favorable comment of the passing tourist. A community has sprung into existence around the new courthouse which is really remarkable for its taste, refinement and intelligence. A group of singularly attractive and even elegant homes crown the neighboring hills and slopes. They boast of no manufacturing establishments and rossibly are a fraction bonstful because they have none. The village has a number of handsome mercantile establishments, and the whole neighborhood wears an air of prosperity. The town has its bank and it is said to be on a soild basis. The graded school has a very attractive building, and the efficiency of the teachers was the theme of the town.

very attractive building, and the efficiency of the teachers was the theme of the town.

Appomattox is not without its honorable and distinguished citizens: Judge D. H. Christian, now retired, would be an honor to any country: Hon. J. C. Jones, who served the county so handsomely in the Logislature, has promoted himself back into a simple farmer's life, and is succeeded by the Hon. Beauregard Thounhill, who is held in deserved esteem by his constituents; Hon. W. H. Ligon, who has rendered efficient service to his people, who is honored by his cultivated and distinguished children, is yet among the foremost men of his county.

THE ABBITTS.

tox without thinking of the Abbitts, xiox without thinking of the Abbitts, Dr. William H. Abbitt and his excellent son, Dr. Julian H. Abbitt and his excellent son, Dr. Julian H. Abbitt and his profession. But it would not be invidious to say that the prime favorite son of Appomattox is Hon. Hall. Flood, a member of Congress, almost boundlessily popular among his constituents and one of the most powerful and graceful orators in Virginia. He is to make the commencement address before the Fork Union Military Academy on May 25th. His baggage has arrived from Washington since Congress adjourned, but the Congressman himself has not become visible to the naked eye up to this time.

Equally beloved, if not so prominent, is Major Joel W. Flood, the Hon. Hal's rather.

There are three churches in West Appomantox, the Presbyterian, the Methodist and the Baptist, and they live todist and the Baptist, and they live todist and the Baptist, and they live together in the most fraternal and helpful relations. On last Sunday the Baptist people had a visit from Dr. Hatcher's fitchmond, who preached to great congregations both in the morning and in the evening. He hald a grateful compliment to his Baptist brethren for Christian education, and especially to Richmond College, and suggested that they would go still further and establish a scholarship in Richmond College, by making a supplement to the amonit which they had already given to that institution. Gentlemen of the church re isfaction, and the bottomars is a contract that he was well assured that the scholarship would be forthcoming at an early day.

It is understood that Dr. Hatcher's visit included another object. It seems that he baptized, assisted in ordaining and married the Rev. Hugh C. Smith, the Baptist pastor here. Mr. Smith is exceedingly popular and useful in this part of the country. His people here have a beautiful parsonage, an elegant house of worship and they give to him the most generous support. In view of this exceptionally kind and magnificent treatment Mr. Smith decided to use the twenty-fifth anniversary of his ordination as the time for tendering to his people and the community a public reception. That event occurred on last Monday afternoon. The parsonage was handsomely decorated, howers, music and refreshments abounded and throngs of people, including visitors from several distinct sections of Virginia and a goodly number of Christian ministers, came to do honor to the admired host and his accomplished family. To a crowded house and a multitude on the lawn Dr. Hatcher made a brief address, in which he greatly confused Mr. Smith by his tender and well-deserved words of compliment, and at the same time greatly delighted the throng of Mr. Smith's friends. The occasion was unusual in its beauty, sentiment and high social enjoyment. The doors were opened at three o'clock and even at a late hur of the night strains of music and happy notes of conversation still filled the house. The entire community uncovered its bead and offered its greeting and his household.
